Course Overview

In 1893, New Zealand became the first country to grant women the right to vote and in 2015, Saudi Arabia became the last country to extend suffrage to women. While women were able to vote in most countries since the end of World War II, progress for women in politics has been slow. Today, women barely make up 22.5 percent of all legislators worldwide. Rwanda and Bolivia are the only countries where women make up the majority of legislators whereas Qatar or Yemen have no women in their national parliaments. In 1960, Sri Lanka elected the first woman Prime Minister - Sirivamo Bandaranaike – and in 1974, Argentina elected Isabel Perón the first woman president in the world. Today, 99 women have led their countries either as prime ministers or presidents. The United States of America currently ranks 76th in the world for its percentage of women in national parliaments and has to date not elected a woman president.

The goal of this class is to understand the male overrepresentation in politics both in the American context but also in a comparative perspective and consider innovative ways to achieve equal political representation. We will read classic and modern scholarship to better understand the theoretical feminist frameworks used to study the political representation of women and empirically explore important topics from a cross-national perspective. Throughout the quarter, we will engage with representatives of local, national, and international women's organizations to learn from their perspectives and gain a look behind the scenes of the women's movement for equal representation.

There is no clear answer to why men are overrepresented in politics but at the end of the quarter, students should be able to engage in thoughtful conversations and discussion on why men are overrepresented, women are underrepresented, and whether existing tools to achieve equal representation are adequate and sufficient.

Required Textbooks:

Pamela Paxton and
Melanie M Hughes. 2014.
Women, Politics and Power
– A Global Perspective.

IDEA. Women in Parliament: Beyond
Numbers. Available for free
as pdf online:
<http://www.idea.int/publications/wip2/index.cfm>

Additional Readings:

All additional readings will be posted on Canvas. All additional readings are required.

Course Structure

The class is structured into three main parts. In each part we will discuss the theoretical frameworks to study the topic as well as shine empirical spotlights on specific countries to bring the theoretical concepts to life.

1. Descriptive Representation of Women: also called the numerical representation of women, we will first discuss the institutional, socio-economic, and cultural barriers to women's political representation before trying to explain cross-national variances of the percentage of women in parliament
2. Substantive Representation of Women: this part centers on the question whether the numerical representation of women will lead to the substantive representation of women. We will discuss several factors that facilitate the representation of women's interests as well as critically assess the definition of 'women interests'
3. Special Topics in Women and Politics: the last four weeks of the class are dedicated to the exploration of current developments in the study of women and politics such as the role of race, party ideology as well as the representation of women in post-conflict societies and Executives worldwide.

Course Evaluation

- |  |                    |
|--|--------------------|
| 1. Class participation and attendance:     | 15% of total grade |
| 2. News Contributions:                     | 15% of total grade |
| 3. Analytical Paper and twitter town hall: | 25% of total grade |
| 4. Midterm:                                | 20% of total grade |
| 5. Final Exam:                             | 25% of total grade |

Course requirements

- 1. Class Participation and Attendance: A successful student-centered seminar requires that students contribute to the learning process in a meaningful way. Students are expected to attend class and actively engage in course activities. Students who make regular and thoughtful contributions to class discussions, display a willingness to help others work through course concepts, and/or with particularly sophisticated responses on current events contributions can expect good participation grades. When deciding on your final grade, I will take your participation into account. Students may consult with the instructor at any time for an assessment of participation.
  - a. I expect every student to come to class prepared. This means you have read the required chapters in the textbooks as well as any additional readings on canvas. I will call on students during class – so be prepared to answer questions!
  - b. I will accept three excused absences. Any more absences will negatively affect your attendance grade.
  - c. You will start with an attendance grade of 100%. After three excused absences, I will abstract 5% for each missed class or for each unexcused class. Excused means that you emailed me before class with a reason why you cannot attend class.
  - d. Attendance will be taken in every class. You must sign the attendance sheet. If you are late, you need to see me after class to add your name. Because being on time for important appointments (such as a class) is a valuable life skill, being late at three occasions will count as one absence.
- 2. Analytical Paper: Before April 11, students will identify one domestic and one international women's organization that works on electing more women to political office. For the analytical paper, I expect you to provide a brief description about the organizations that includes the years active, programmatic goals, main activities, and geographical scope. The paper also needs to include 3 potential questions for the twitter town hall and contact information for each organization to recruit them for participation in the twitter town hall.
- 3. Current Events Contribution: During the last part of the quarter (Special Topics: May 2 - 18), I expect students to bring a printed out news article addressing the topic of that day to class.

4. Twitter Town hall: At the end of the course, the class should organize a twitter town hall discussing the question “What can the US learn from other countries to achieve equal representation in Congress?” A twitter town hall is essentially a Q&A session on twitter around a specific issue where invited hosts discuss the respective topic for one hour. Students are responsible to recruit at least 1 partner organization and/or one elected official for the twitter town hall; prepare questions and potential answers and resources to tweet out during the town hall; and advertise the town hall on their social media platforms to ensure broad participation.
  - a. Read here on how to organize a Twitter Town Hall:
http://health.gov/healthliteracyonline/twitter\_chat\_guide.pdf
  - b. Example of a Twitter Town hall on Women of Color in Politics:
<https://storify.com/politicalparity/twitter-town-hall-women-of-color-marchtoparity>

5. Midterm: The Midterm Exam will cover all of the content studied up to the date of the exam. It will consist of concept definitions and short essay answers. I will provide a study guide. Make-up exams will only be given for valid excuses (approved university activities, documented illnesses), and only if you contact me before the exam. Please contact me in person or by email.

6. Final Exam: The Final Exam will cover the complete content of the course. It will consist of multiple choice, concept definitions, and short essays. I will provide a study guide.
